ERN MALLEY for beginners

The fictional creation of poets James McCauley and Harold Stewart, Ernest Lalor Malley was created in response to their dislike for modernist poetry. Originally intended to be a hoax that would reveal the emptiness and absurdity of modernist poetry, the poems co-written by McCauley and Stewart became first the centre of a public scandal and later the subject of a highly publicised obscenity trial.

The poems were written in a single afternoon as a pastiche of fragments from books and documents the two poets had lying about their office, intentionally misconstrued quotes and deliberate grammatical and spelling errors in an attempt to produce a perfect example of what they considered bad poetry.

The manuscript was submitted to Max Harris, the editor of the Angry Penguins journal, along with a falsified letter from Ern's "sister" who claimed to have found the ms. after Ern's death when she was cleaning up his possessions. Harris was enraptured by the poetry and dedicated an entire issue to Malley, posthumously celebrating his genius.

Many regard the Ern Malley poems as the best work that the two poets produced in their careers, arguing that despite their intentions, Stewart and McCauley inadvertently tapped into their own literary talents and their subconscious minds when freed from the restraints that their usual, more formal, writing style imposed upon them.
